Netflix Releases Photos of Bradley Cooper Wearing Prosthetic Nose to Portray Leonard Bernstein

As Netflix released the first stills from the set of “Maestro,” Bradley Cooper’s upcoming biopic film about Leonard Bernstein, there was one thing most fans could agree about.

Cooper looked utterly unrecognizable, especially in one image as an elderly version of the iconic Jewish conductor.

But as legions of angry social media users pointed out, part of Cooper’s transformation involved a prosthetic nose, something that many found to be antisemitic — especially since Cooper is not Jewish.

“There’s no reason to believe that the decision to wear a fake nose is a deliberately antisemitic act,” wrote James Hirsh, a co-host of the Menschwarmers podcast about Jewish athletes, in the Canadian Jewish News. “Cooper is presumably interested in exploring the life of a great composer whom he admires.

A number of Jews are involved in the production. And the prosthesis arguably helps with the resemblance.

“But this is Cooper’s third time portraying a historical figure on screen,” Hirsh added. “No prosthetics were used to play ‘American Sniper’s Chris Kyle or ‘Licorice Pizza’s Jon Peters. He didn’t use them to play the Elephant Man on Broadway.”

Hirsh was far from alone in calling out the prosthetic.

Even though actors frequently adapt their bodies while playing historical figures, conversations about how many non-Jews play Jewish characters in Hollywood — and on what scale that should be allowed — have circulated for years.

But the “Jewface” debate received a boost last year, especially after non-Jewish actress Kathryn Hahn was cast as the outspokenly Jewish comedy pioneer Joan Rivers (in a series that was eventually dropped). Comedian Sarah Silverman made headlines by berating the casting, saying “Right now, representation f***ing matters” on an episode of her podcast.

The Bernstein biopic discourse has been particularly charged since 2018, when Cooper and Steven Spielberg — who was first slated to direct “Maestro,” before it became Cooper’s directorial follow-up to his 2018 hit remake of “A Star Is Born” — beat out the actor-director team of Jake Gyllenhaal and Cary Fukunaga in securing the music rights from Bernstein’s estate.

In talking about the Bernstein sweepstakes in an interview last year, Gyllenhaal — who like Spielberg is Jewish — mentioned Bernstein’s Jewishness in admitting defeat.

“Sticking your neck out, hoping to get to tell the stories you love and that have been in your heart for a very long time is something to be proud of. And that story, that idea of playing one of the most preeminent Jewish artists in America and his struggle with his identity was in my heart for 20 some odd years, but sometimes those things don’t work out,” he told Deadline.

Bradley Cooper as Leonard Bernstein on the set of “Maestro”

Some fans resurfaced the possibility of a Bernstein played by Gyllenhaal in their swipes at the on-set images of Cooper.

Production on “Maestro,” which co-stars Carey Mulligan as Bernstein’s wife Felicia Montealegre, started last month. The film will likely be released in 2023.

Kaiserman JCC Opening Maccabi Hall of Fame

JARRAD SAFFREN | STAFF WRITER

Daniel Weiss is Jewish, but he's not very religious. For him, Judaism is "a sense of family and culture," he said.

So when the Kaiserman JCC board of directors member came up with a way to celebrate that sense of family and culture, he wanted to move on the idea. The longtime JCC Maccabi soccer coach's idea was a hall of fame honoring many of the great Philadelphia-area athletes who have competed at the games over the years.

In February, when Weiss pitched the plan to Kaiserman CEO Alan Scher, the CEO did not say "yes." He said "when."

Weiss said he would put together an inaugural induction ceremony in just a few months.

On June 16, it will happen at the Wynnewood facility. The outdoor event will feature corn hole, most of the 13 inductees in the flesh and former Philadelphia 76ers announcer Marc Zumoff as emcee.

The inaugural class is going to include two or three times as many athletes, teams and contributors as a normal class will in the future, Weiss said. He said you need a big first class to establish the hall.

Among the inductees are David Groverman, who "basically financed" the first Philadelphia team for the JCC games in 1984, Weiss said; Rose Weinstein, who has coached girls and boys tennis teams for more than 35 years; and Devon Polak, a swimmer who earned 31 medals in JCC Maccabi competition. Teams are also on the list, like the 2002 boys soccer squad that did not allow a goal during its entire gold medal run.

The JCC Maccabi Games are an international competition for Jewish athletes between the ages of 13 and 16. The Philadelphia area sends teams in soccer, basketball and tennis, among other sports.

Kaiserman has long served as the headquarters for the local delegation, as most of the athletes are from the Main Line and Bucks County, according to Weiss.

The inaugural class is going to include two or three times as many athletes, teams and contributors as a normal class will in the future.

“If you have a good idea, why wait?” Weiss said. “Let’s build it.”

Scher agrees with that sentiment. He has promised to commit to the hall as a regular feature of the JCC. There is no designated room yet in the Wynnewood facility, but Scher and the board are exploring options.

In the future, Weiss wants to see something like his high school sports hall of fame at Harriton High School, which he is in for his exploits in soccer, football and track. Harriton’s hall showcases pictures of the athletes and descriptions of their high school careers.

“People will come in and see, ‘Hey, my cousin’s in the hall,’” Weiss said. “It gives people a sense of connection.”

Weiss is taking the same why wait approach to the construction of the hall as he did to the initial ceremony. He hopes to have it done by the winter.

More than 100 people are signed up to attend the June 16 induction, so Scher expects interest to remain strong. And if that ends up happening, the JCC will be able to build a display around the annual event that it can add to “year after year after year,” he said.

Since taking over last July, Scher has tried to figure out the JCC’s business model around camp, preschool and assorted fitness activities. He thinks the hall can be part of that vision.

“Our hope is we’re not only celebrating a culture, but we’ll continue to engage the alumni,” he said of JCC Maccabi competitors. “We see them as important leaders associated with the Maccabi experience, and this will be a vehicle for that.”

And there should be no shortage of future inductees. Weiss said the four-man selection committee, which includes both Maccabi and Kaiserman leaders, whittled a large field down from 100 nominations to 30 to 20 ... and finally to 13. But many worthy names were left out of the inaugural class.

There also will be new names to add. This year’s squad will feature five teams — hockey, boys soccer, girls soccer, boys basketball and girls basketball — and 62 athletes. The 2022 JCC Maccabi Games are set for July 31-Aug. 5 in San Diego.

“Most of our teams expect to compete and be in the mix,” said Marc Swarbrick, a Kaiserman JCC board member and hall organizer alongside Weiss.

And if they do, they may just be able to come back and reflect on the experience years later.

“This is something you can do as a Jewish person and be involved in the community and represent your community,” Weiss said. JE

Pita Chip Expands, Shows Interfaith Solidarity

SASHA ROGELBERG | STAFF WRITER

For Howard Klayman and Omar Alsaadi, food is the great equalizer. And it doesn't hurt that it's also the industry that's brought them both success.

The co-owners — one Jewish, one Muslim — of the Middle Eastern restaurant Pita Chip expanded their business with a new brick-and-mortar restaurant in Yardley last month. Their continued partnership-turned-friendship is a testament to the ability of food to bring people together, they said.

"While we're building a brand, we want to do as much good as we can. That's something that's in our fabric," Klayman said. "We just want to spread our food out there and have people come together, no matter where they are from and hopefully, solve their problems through a meal."

On its May 18 opening weekend, the restaurant raised money for Congregation Kol Emet, down the road in Morrisville, and Caring for Friends, which provides food and companionship for disabled and elderly isolated community members. Between its opening weekend and other recent fundraisers for the Kisses For Kyle Foundation and Nationalities Service Center, Klayman and Alsaadi raised more than $10,000.

"We obviously want to be good neighbors, first and foremost," Klayman said.

The business has come a long way since its 2015 opening at Temple University.

Alsaadi, one of Pita Chip's founders, had a humble idea of opening up a falafel stand by a college campus, reminiscent of his early life growing up in Syria.

"I remember buying a falafel sandwich from a falafel stand and standing on the street and eating it with a bottle of soda," Alsaadi said. "It's all that stuff brings ... childhood memories."

Alsaadi is not a restaurateur by training. He immigrated to the United States in 1979, studying civil and environmental engineering at the University of Texas at Austin. He went on to get his master's, but he always had a love for food.

His mother frequently cooked with diverse spices and flavor profiles, something he's tried to recreate with Pita Chip, describing the restaurant concept as "Tex-Mex-style food with a Middle Eastern flair."

Along with business partner Mouhanad Kabbani, the two dreamed up something more ambitious than a falafel stand. Three years after Pita Chip's first opening, the two opened another restaurant in University City in 2018.

It was around this time that Howard Klayman joined the team as co-owner, though he had worked with the duo almost since the restaurant's inception.

Klayman, like Alsaadi, was not trained to own a restaurant, but his love for the industry runs deep. A self-proclaimed "foodie," Klayman came from a Northeast Philadelphia Jewish family, who, in the 1950s, was in the pizza business.

Almost seven decades later, Klayman was working in the food distribution industry and was approached by Alsaadi and Kabbani to provide distribution for the budding business.

As Pita Chip grew, so did Klayman's interest in becoming more involved in the brand.

"I tried their food after their original testing, and I was sold, frankly," Klayman said.

Though proud of their respective roots and partnerships, Klayman and Alsaadi don't see the big fuss about being interfaith restaurant owners, though it's a frequent joke among staff.

"I really don't think it should be something that a Muslim or Arab and someone Jewish — it shouldn't be something unusual," Alsaadi said.

That philosophy is reflected in their food. Falafel isn't something people usually make in their homes, Alsaadi said. It's frequently bought at restaurants and stands, which means the variations on the food are endless.

In the greater debate about whether or not falafel is even an Israeli food, Alsaadi shuts down dissenters.

Food variations abound in the Middle East, with different takes on falafel existing even within regions of Syria, Alsaadi said.

It's a food defined by the region of the Middle East, not a particular country. It's an Israeli food because people in Israel eat it. It's a Palestinian and Lebanese food, too.

Food can link an individual to a geographic area, which is both personal to someone with memories of a specific dish, and communal, with individuals all over a region finding joy in a shared cuisine.

"Instead of making it a difference, it should bring people together," Alsaadi said. JE

What if you found your calling after your first career ended — when you were already passing middle age?

Would you pursue it? Or would you just say forget it, I'm too old?

David N. Goodman, 69, decided to pursue it.

The Elkins Park resident became a rabbi on May 22 when he graduated from the Reconstructionist Rabbinical College in Wyncote. He did so after spending seven years in his 60s studying to become one.

But it's not just the near-decade in school that stands out about Goodman's story. Rabbinical school required him to uproot his previous life. The new rabbi spent the previous 30-plus years as an Associated Press reporter in Detroit. He moved to the Philadelphia area to enroll at the RRC.

This summer, as he celebrates his graduation, he will continue serving as spiritual leader of Nafshenu, a Cherry Hill, New Jersey, congregation of about 36 families.

"I look in the mirror, and I know I'm 69. But for seven years, I was in class with people half my age," Goodman said. "I feel younger than when I started. I feel an excitement and a newness about what I'm doing."

Goodman officially became a Jewish leader on May 22. But really, he had served as one for many years.

In his previous life as a journalist, he joined Congregation T'chayah, a bottom-up synagogue that depended on members to lead services. It was 1988, and the 35-year-old had not been involved in Jewish life since his teenage years in NFTY, the national Reform movement that engages teens in Jewish activity.

But he had a son who was 6 and a daughter who was 1 at the time. He also had vivid memories of going by himself to the campus Hillel at the University of Missouri, where his dad was a physics professor.

Rabbi David N. Goodman

As Goodman explained, Judaism was in him. He just needed to rediscover it.

At T'chayah in Ferndale, Michigan, a small city in the Detroit metro area, he did.

One of the requirements at the bottom-up temple was that congregants had to take turns leading services. Goodman got in the rotation and grew to love it.

As he explained, the experience became an outlet for "an aspect of my personality that I hadn't really explored." He sang; he discussed the weekly Torah portion; he guided discussions among fellow members.

He was good at all of it.

"I enjoy the ritual parts of Jewish life," the rabbi said.

Goodman began to keep kosher, too, and pray regularly. But as he went about his Jewish journey, the journalist never saw it as some divine path toward becoming a rabbi.

As he put it, he just wanted to grow into a “well-educated Jew.”

“My attitude was the world doesn’t need necessarily another rabbi,” he said. “But what we do need is Jews in the pews who know what’s going on.”

That attitude motivated him to sign up for a prayer leadership training program called the Jewish Renewal Movement. Led by Philadelphia-area rabbis Marcia Prager and Shawn Zevit, the program included four one-week retreats over a two-year period. Its goal was to “help people bring more spirituality into prayer practice,” Goodman said.

What Goodman got out of it was a series of “amazing prayer experiences,” as he described them. In his AP days, he had covered church events and seen Christians lose themselves in prayer. But he had never really seen that among his own people.

Until the Jewish Renewal retreats.

“I said, ‘This is great.’ We need more of what they’re having,” he recalled.

Goodman went on the retreats in 2011 and ’12, around the same time that he was forced to consider retiring from the AP or getting a new job, as his pension would kick in at age 65. So when he asked himself what he wanted to do next, the answer was sitting there in his mind.

“I should apply to rabbinic school,” he said.

In 2015, Goodman loaded up his Ford and drove to Philadelphia. During his seven years at the RRC, he taught Hebrew at Kol Tzedek in West Philadelphia, served as the student rabbi at West Chester University and got hired as an intern at Nafshenu in 2020. He also met his new wife, Pearl Raz, and they have been married for 2½ years.

Goodman became full time at Nafshenu because congregants just liked him.

“I don’t think I’ve ever seen the man not smile,” said Rachael Blumer, 36, a synagogue member.

Lisa Lichtman, another Nafshenu congregant, interviewed Goodman for his initial intern position.

“Going back after retiring, that says a lot about somebody’s growth, right?” she said. JE

Art Exhibit Features Work of IDF Soldier Killed by Hamas

In August 2014, 23-year-old Israel Defense Forces Lt. Hadar Goldin was kidnapped and killed in Gaza by Hamas terrorists, just two hours after a cease-fire was declared after Operation Protective Edge.

Nearly eight years later, Goldin's parents, Leah and Simcha Goldin, still wait in agony for the return of his body for burial in Israel.

Goldin's story is shedding new light in Greater Philadelphia as part of a traveling exhibit that showcases the late soldier's prolific artistic talent.

Funded by the Jewish Federation in partnership with Kaiserman JCC, the Consulate General of Israel in New York and the Hadar Goldin Foundation, "Hadar Goldin: The Final Peace" is open to the public through June 17 at the Kaiserman JCC in Wynnewood.

Following the recent uptick in terror attacks in Israel, this exhibit comes at a much-needed time to not only celebrate Goldin's artwork but also raise awareness about Hamas' control of the Gaza Strip and the Israelis who have been held captive by them.

"I hope that people who visit this exhibit will join in the effort to bring Hadar home from Gaza after eight years and help bring peace to Hadar, peace to his family and peace to the world," said Leah Goldin, who, along with her husband and children, continue to hope, advocate and fight for the return of her son and fellow slain soldier Oron Shaul.

The exhibit's opening on June 1 included a private briefing and conversation with local legislators about Israel's challenges in dealing with Hamas in Gaza. Reut Baror, a Kaiserman JCC board member; Alan Scher, the Kaiserman CEO; and Danielle Weiss, the Jewish Community Relations Council chair, welcomed guests during the program and discussed the importance of bringing this opportunity to the community.

The reception featured remarks by Ambassador Asaf Zamir, Consul General of Israel in New York; Maya Karkai, the exhibit curator; Leah Goldin, founder of the Hadar Goldin Foundation; and William Daroff, CEO of the Conference of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations.

"We were honored to host the Goldin family and an exhibit of Hadar's artwork in Philadelphia," said Jason Holtzman, director of the Jewish Federation's JCRC. "The situation that the Goldin family has been dealing with since 2014 is truly heartbreaking."

Goldin's story is of special importance to the Jewish Federation, as the incident took place in the Sagaiya neighborhood of the organization's Partnership2Gether region in Netivot and Sdot Negev, just miles from the Gaza Strip. The region's communities have rallied behind the family's efforts to advocate for Goldin's return, including members of Kibbutz Alumim. Located directly across from where the horrific capture took place, the kibbutz named a playground in his memory.

"We think raising awareness of the fact that Hamas has been holding Hadar's body, as well as the body of Oron Shaul and two other Israeli civilians, is greatly important for people to understand," Holtzman continued. "We want to see Hadar and the others returned home immediately."

Experience "Hadar Goldin: The Final Peace"

The traveling exhibit has been presented to the United Nations, featured around the world and is now on display for the Greater Philadelphia community. In addition to general touring hours, the Jewish Federation and JCC are hosting two special programs as part of the exhibit, offering even more thought-provoking experiences:

YOU SHOULD KNOW ...

Adam Lovitz

JARRAD SAFFREN | STAFF WRITER

Adam Lovitz, 36, has spent a majority of his life painting. So, like any true artist, he has a couple of favorite works. “Milk Moon Residue” is a lavender, creamy display. Lovitz said it gives him a sweet and tender feeling, like a quiet breath, a moment of purity, a moment of honesty.

“Lunch Break” is the opposite. Lovitz described it as a regurgitation of “a lot of stuff” like veggies, fruit and even what appears to be a lightning bolt. “Lunch Break” represents chaotic busyness, according to the painter.

Together, the paintings show the duality of everyday life, the artist explains.

“A very quiet, distilled moment and a bubbly, oozy, kind of everything moment,” he said.

One might say that Lovitz’s art is imitating life. It’s an effect that the Jewish painter and Media resident aims for every day in his home studio.

“There’s a duality in us all,” Lovitz said.

In the artist’s own life, his studio time is Milk Moon Residue — that moment when he can slow down and appreciate the beauty around him.

But everything else is Lunch Break. A sort of chaotic, busy “everything-ness,” as he describes it.

Like most artists, Lovitz makes time for his studio work every day. But also like most artists, he cannot make a living on his paintings alone.

In addition to shows at Philadelphia galleries like Fleisher/Ollman and Commonweal, the artist works as an adjunct professor at Temple University and Rowan University. Soon, he will start a full-time role as an art teacher at the Jack M. Barrack Hebrew Academy in Bryn Mawr.

Lovitz is married to his high school sweetheart, Emily Lovitz, and they have two sons under 5, Isaiah and Levi. While his wife works as a teacher, Lovitz needs to support their family, too.

But he pledges to never give up his painting, either.

“It’s all out of a sense of love. I’m going to find a way to make this work,” Lovitz said.

Lovitz’s mother, Sandi Lovitz, was also a painter, but she had more of an entrepreneurial spirit, according to the son. She would paint on the canvas, but she would also paint furniture or jewelry.

“I’ll put my creativity anywhere,” Lovitz said, explaining his mother’s philosophy.

The son is different. He prefers the canvas. He became confident on it in high school, and then decided to make it his focus at the University of Delaware.

After college, Lovitz, who grew up and became a bar mitzvah in Havertown, returned to the area to earn his master’s at the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. Then he lived in South Philadelphia for 10 years and worked at restaurants and bars to make ends meet.

The artist was a night owl, and while he wanted to paint in his studio until 4 a.m., he was often bartending instead. He said his shift to teaching and fatherhood put him on a more normal schedule, which he prefers. He vows to never go back to the serving and bartending life.

Lovitz does sell paintings. But he does not sell enough to live on it as his income for the year.

“Since I’m a dad, I’m a daytime painter. It’s nice to work in the sunlight,” he said. “It’s constantly adapting to new rhythms of life.”

The artist thanks his wife for balancing his chaotic and multi-faceted income with a stable one of her own. But since they are high school sweethearts, Emily Lovitz was always aware of what she was getting into, according to Lovitz. He has warned her that he will never just go sell insurance.

Emily Lovitz, for her part, said her husband’s artistic path never really factored into her decision to be with him.

“He’s my partner. He’s my best friend. So I don’t necessarily think a career will make or break a relationship,” she added.

And their dynamic has clearly worked. Just this year, the couple moved out of the city and into their suburban home. It’s an ideal place for a young family to grow up.

Lovitz didn’t belong to a specific synagogue as a kid, though he celebrated holidays with his family. But the painter and his wife, who grew up Methodist, are starting to look into synagogues so their young sons can attend Hebrew school.

Emily Lovitz thinks the relationship works because, just like their respective careers, her personality is more grounded and Adam’s is more spontaneous.

“I think it’s always just been a good balance,” she said.

The artist is happy with this life. He understands that most of his artist friends can’t make a full-time living with their art, either. So if they want to keep doing it, they have to work other jobs and then make time.

They have to embrace the chaotic busyness. But it’s worth it, Lovitz said. It’s the art, after all, that brings him back to his Milk Moon Residue.

“It’s just something that I always found a sense of, ‘I’m interested in this and I’m going to keep doing it naturally,’” he said. JE

More Tremors in the Shaky Coalition

Could Israel's rightward-leaning parties — who have historically been the strongest advocates for the settler movement — find themselves in the position of causing Israelis who live in the West Bank to be under martial law? That actually might happen, as another politically challenging dilemma confronts the increasingly fragile Israeli governing coalition, which passed its one-year mark last week.

Since the Six Day War, the territory beyond the historic "Green Line" has been under Israeli military occupation. Israeli citizens who live in the area have lived under civil law by virtue of an "emergency measure," which has not been extended to the area's Palestinians, who remain subject to military law. The emergency regulation, which must be renewed every five years, is set to expire at the end of June.

The reason most of us have not heard about the "emergency measure" and its five-year renewal is because renewal is practically a given — or had been until this year. But now, with the government holding a 60-seat tie in the Knesset and the opposition committed to obstruction, it isn't at all clear that the emergency measure can muster enough support.

The bill lost a crucial vote on June 6. One partner in the coalition, the Islamist Ra'am party, cannot support a law that favors Jews in the territory and not fellow Palestinians. Without Ra'am, the number of Knesset members likely to support the legislation is down to 56. But some other coalition members abstained. And even though passage of the bill is unquestionably something favored by rightward-leaning parties who are joined with Likud leader and former Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in the Knesset opposition, they have committed not to support any measure proposed by the governing coalition, as part of their effort to topple the current government and its leadership, and voted against it.

These political machinations could create real problems for the settler community — which represents a significant voter bloc for Netanyahu and his opposition team. Under the civilian control mandated by the "emergency measure," Israel's 600,000 citizens who live beyond the Green Line are tried in civilian courts and receive social and health benefits just like residents of Israel proper. They lose all that if they fall under military rule. Even a traffic ticket would have to be adjudicated by a military judge. Moreover, members of the Knesset who live in the West Bank will cease to be residents of Israel, a requirement for public service.

There are other dark clouds for Prime Minister Naftali Bennett, who seems to be paying the price for favoring pragmatism over ideology in leading his widely divergent eight-party coalition — most of whom are not his natural political allies. In fairly rapid succession, four members of Bennett's inner circle — his chief of staff, senior foreign policy advisor, personal assistant and spokesperson — all announced their resignations, reportedly frustrated that they can't budge their boss to the right.

And, of course, there are the continuing, unrelenting opposition efforts of Netanyahu and friends, who have been encouraged by the recent further weakening of the prosecution's case against Netanyahu.

For now, Bennett is hanging on. But his grip is weakening. JE

Deadly Ghost Guns

Ghost guns are unserialized, unregistered and untraceable firearms that are bought in pieces and can be assembled at home. They are a worrisome addition to the growing arsenal of killing machines that plague our country. They are legal in 40 states. As crime rates soar, the quick spread and easy access of ghost guns are raising alarms.

Ghost guns are unlike any other dangerous item sold in America. They can be bought online like an Amazon purchase. Once delivered to the buyer's home, they can be assembled in the family room like an item from Ikea. And if one needs guidance with the assembly, online YouTube and other videos help navigate the construction process.

Ghost guns begin with unfinished frames or receivers — the piece of the firearm that contains the firing mechanism, and the part of a gun that is regulated under federal law. When a frame is "unfinished," it is unregulated. And since it has no serial number, the ghost gun is wholly untraceable. But once ghost guns are assembled, they look, feel and function like a traditional gun and are just as deadly.

Last week, a Maryland law prohibiting the sale, receipt and transfer of an unfinished frame or receiver

Los Angeles. But despite the public uproar over increasing gun violence and frustration over the proliferation of untraceable ghost guns, Congress has not acted.

Although we favor a ban on ghost guns, we cannot understand why

But despite the public uproar over increasing gun violence and frustration over the proliferation of untraceable ghost guns, Congress has not acted.

that does not have a serial number by the manufacturer went into effect. That day, the city of Baltimore sued the largest manufacturer of ghost guns, Polymer 80, as part of an attempt to fight the public health crisis of gun violence. Similar suits have been filed by the District of Columbia and the city of they aren't, at the very least, subject to regulation and registration. And why is it that the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives does not consider ghost guns a firearm? Purchasers are supposed to show identification to establish proper age when they buy cigarettes and alcohol. Every automobile is issued a vehicle identification number, and drivers must be licensed.

But none of that applies to ghost guns. There are no age limits on who can buy them, there are no limitations on how many can be bought, and they are sold in interlocking pieces like Legos, in order to facilitate easy assembly and use.

The fundamental problem with ghost guns is that many purchasers buy them to evade law enforcement or because they cannot otherwise buy firearms legally. That includes underage buyers, buyers with criminal convictions, gun traffickers and others we don't want walking around with a deadly arsenal. While we understand that regulating ghost guns will not end gun violence, restricting access and insisting on only allowing sales of traceable firearms to those of age who pass a background check would be a positive step in the development of sane gun laws to protect our lives. JE

Hate is on the Rise and the Pennsylvania Legislature Must Act

BY JAMES ELAM, IV AND SHOSHANA SCHILLER

On June 7, 1998, three men — two of them avowed white supremacists — lynched James Byrd, Jr., a Black man, in Jasper, Texas. After beating him, they brutally and barbarically killed James by dragging him 3½ miles behind their truck before dropping his body in front of an African American church.

Just a few months later, in October 1998, Matthew Shepard, a gay college student, was beaten, tortured and left to die tied to a barbed-wire fence. The year before James and Matthew were murdered, legislation to expand and strengthen the existing federal hate crimes law was proposed in Congress but did not pass.

However, the murders of James and Matthew, motivated by hatred, led to the eventual passage of the Matthew Shepard and James Byrd, Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act almost 12 years later. The act extended existing law to include hate crimes based on gender, sexual orientation, gender identity and disability, and strengthened the existing federal hate crimes law.

Since the passage of the HCPA at the federal level, Pennsylvania inexplicably has not enacted a comprehensive hate crimes law that encompasses crimes based on sexual orientation, gender, gender identity or disability, despite efforts to do so.

While a more comprehensive hate crimes law was proposed in 2019 by state Rep. Dan Frankel and state Sen. Larry Farnese, the bills were never taken up for a vote. In that same time, the number of reported hate crimes in Pennsylvania rose dramatically, up 98% from 2019 to 2020. And, as documented by the Anti-Defamation League, in 2021 Pennsylvania had the highest incidents of white supremacist propaganda distribution of any state in the country, by a wide margin.

Across the country, in 2020, the number of hate crime murders was higher than it has been since before the HCPA was signed into law. Hate crimes against Black people rose more than 43% between 2019 and 2020 and against Asian Americans and Pacific Islanders 61%. Antisemitic incidents rose to an all-time high in 2021, a 34% increase over 2020. Hate crimes based on gender identity rose 18% in 2019 and another 19% in 2020. In Wyoming, where Shepard was murdered, hate crimes were up 260% between 2019 and 2020.

We know that hate is rarely confined to just one group. The tragic racially motivated killing of innocent shoppers in Buffalo was foretold by a writing that attacked both Black people and Jews. White supremacists openly strike out not only against people of color but also against members of the gender-queer community.

It is clear, now more than ever, that it is time to address Pennsylvania's weak laws against hate. This is not a discussion of policy but of basic humanity. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has a motto: Virtue, Liberty and Independence. Those words ring hollow if many of our fellow residents live in constant fear of the growing problem of hate crimes being committed against them in an environment where their chosen government refuses to enact laws to protect their lives.

We can do better, we should do better and we must do better to push back against the growing threat of white supremacy and hatred. The Pennsylvania Legislature must act. JE

CRT Revisited

I was pleased to see Fred Pincus' opinion piece ("Where Do Jews Fit Into Critical Race Theory?", May 26). Many on-target issues are raised in this piece (such as Jews as middlemen minorities and meritocratic standards for Jews versus Blacks and Hispanics). Among the smaller issues, Pincus' definitions of equality versus equity would have been better served if taken from a dictionary.

My main concern, however, is with the argument over whether CRT is good for Jews. I don't believe it is good for anyone, except those of right-wing persuasions. The problem lies in the title itself (and, worse, the abbreviation), and many of the definitions ascribed to it.

CRT originated in the mid-1970s in the writings of American legal scholars concerned that many of the advances of the civil rights era had slowed or even begun to move backward. Accordingly, then, we should be advocating for an effort to shift the purposes, scope and delivery of education to promote a greater understanding of the lives and experiences of all Americans, not just those who are "like us."

Derrick Bell, whose work gave rise to CRT, was once asked about CRT and replied, "I don't know what that is. To me, it means telling the truth, even in the face of criticism." What happens in the absence of common sense reasoning is the co-opting of important ideas by political and community leaders wishing to destroy these ideas for their own aspirations. We handed the opposition a three-letter target; they fired away. We made it easy.

The story needs to be less about racism and race, and more about justice and equality, fairness and truth as we seek to provide the real story of history in America. Then this instructional movement will be good for us all, including the Jews.

Stopping Iran

Since 1979, the theocratic government that is Iran has publicly and repeatedly proclaimed its primary foreign policy goal: the murder of the Jewish population of Israel ("A Plan B For Iran?", June 2).

It has not yet acted on its antisemitic genocidal goal for only one reason: It has not achieved nuclear capacity — yet. Neville Chamberlain's belief that a piece of white paper — what today is called "the Iran deal" — could appease or deter pure evil — whether by Hitler then — or the Jew-hating mullahs now — is the clearest example of the likely fatal myopia of President Biden and his cadre of advisers in the State Department.

The only plan that can work to end Iran's murderous nuclear ambition is for Israel and those clear-thinking countries that are not willfully blind to evil is to destroy Iran's nuclear capacity once and for all, including those individuals responsible for it. JE

‘Foreign Aid’ to Israel a Billion-dollar Bonanza for the US

BY YORAM ETTINGER

The U.S. does not give foreign aid to Israel — the U.S. makes an annual investment in Israel, one that provides the American taxpayer a return on investment of several hundred percent.

Is that a valid statement?

While Israel is a grateful recipient of several hundred U.S. military systems, it also serves as a battle-tested, cost-effective laboratory for the U.S. defense and aerospace industries, which employ — directly and indirectly — 3.5 million Americans. Moreover, the Israel Defense Forces serve as a laboratory for the U.S. military itself, which enhances U.S. performance on the battlefield.

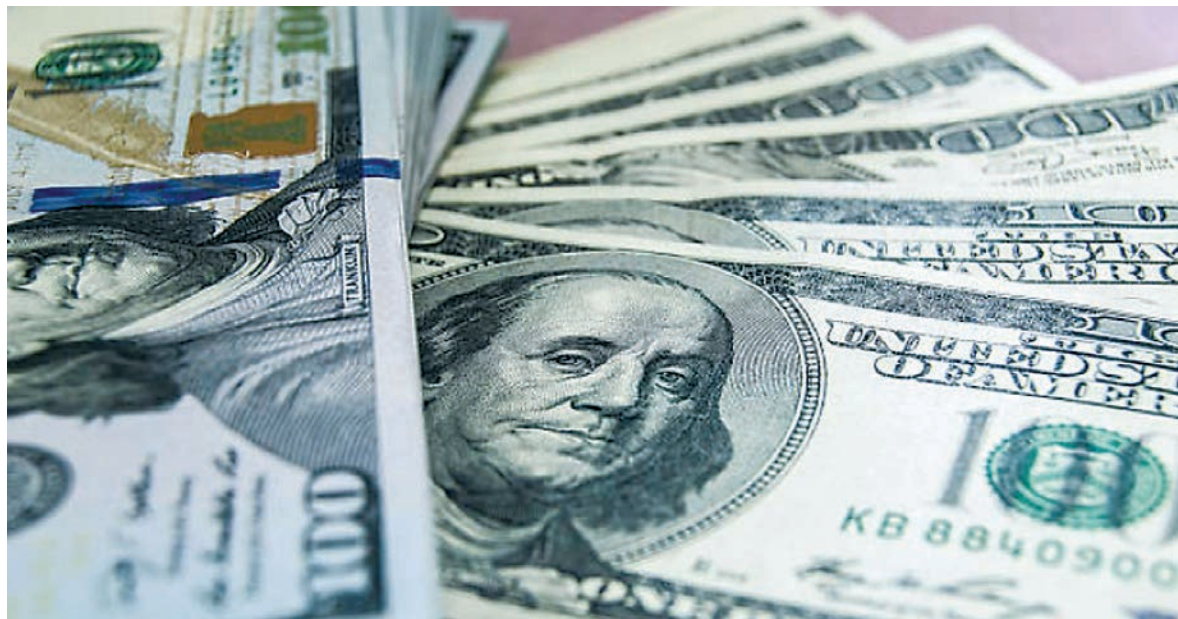

By serving as such a laboratory, Israel enhances the economy, national security and homeland security of the United States.

For example, the Israeli Air Force flies the U.S. company Lockheed-Martin’s F-16 and F-35 combat aircraft. This provides both Lockheed-Martin and the U.S. Air Force with invaluable information on operations, maintenance and repairs. This information is then used to manufacture a multitude of upgrades for next-generation aircraft.

The F-16 itself has been improved by several hundred Israeli-driven upgrades, including to the cockpit, fire control, wings and fuel tanks. This has spared Lockheed-Martin 10-20 years of research and development — which would have cost billions of dollars. It also enhances the company’s global competitiveness, increases its multi-billion-dollar exports and expands its employment base. Similar advantages are enjoyed by Boeing, the manufacturer of the F-15, which is also flown and upgraded by the Israeli Air Force.

Indeed, Israel is the Triple-A store for Lockheed-Martin, Boeing, Raytheon, G.D., Northrop Grumman, L3Harris Technologies, G.E., Oshkosh, Honeywell and many other U.S. defense and aerospace companies. This enhances the image of these companies abroad and multiplies their export markets because other countries assume that if Israel — with its unique national security challenges — uses these companies’ products, they must be of high quality.

Furthermore, Israel shares its battle tactics with the U.S. Since the two countries face mutual threats from conventional forces and terrorists — who are often equipped with Russian, Chinese and Iranian military systems — this is of great importance. Indeed, many U.S. battle tactics have been formulated based on Israeli combat experience.

For example, U.S. special operations units and urban warfare specialists are trained by Israeli experts in neutralizing car bombs, improvised explosive devices and suicide bombers. U.S. combat pilots benefit greatly from joint maneuvers with highly-experienced Israeli combat pilots, who always fly in a do-or-die state of mind and are thus forced to employ creativity and audacity, fully exploiting the capabilities of U.S.-made combat aircraft.

These benefits extend to the realm of intelligence. According to a former head of U.S. Air Force Intelligence, Gen. George Keegan, the U.S. would have to establish five CIAs to procure the intelligence provided by Israel. The annual budget of the CIA is around $15 billion.

According to the late Sen. Daniel Inouye, who was chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and Intelligence Committee, the scope of Israeli intelligence shared with the U.S. exceeded the intelligence provided by all NATO countries combined. Israeli intelligence helped foil terrorist, kidnapping and bombing plots against the U.S., secured airliners and airports and provided vital data on advanced Soviet/Russian military systems.

Israel is a unique force multiplier for the United States, helping to extend America’s strategic reach, so it can secure vulnerable pro-U.S. Arab oil-producing regimes and deter conventional wars and terrorism. With Israel’s help, the United States can do this without the deployment of U.S. troops, which is not the case with countries like Japan and South Korea.

The late Gen. Alexander Haig, who served as NATO’s Supreme Commander and U.S. Secretary of State, and Adm. Elmo Zumwalt once stated: “Israel is the largest U.S. aircraft carrier, which does not require American soldiers on board, cannot be sunk and is deployed in a most critical region (between Europe-Asia-Africa and between the Mediterranean-Red Sea-Indian Ocean-Persian Gulf), sparing the U.S. the need to manufacture, deploy and maintain a few more real aircraft carriers and additional ground divisions, which would cost the U.S. taxpayer some $15 billion annually.”

Israel is also an asset to the U.S. tech sector. More than 200 top American high-tech companies — such as Intel, Microsoft, Cisco, IBM, Apple, Johnson & Johnson, Google and Facebook — which employ several million Americans, have established research and development centers in Israel. They use Israel’s brainpower to increase U.S. production and expand U.S. exports and employment. U.S. commercial industries, like defense industries, have realized that Israel is a critical partner in sustaining their edge over China, Russia, Europe and Japan in the development and manufacture of game-changing commercial and military technologies.

In conclusion, the U.S.-Israel strategic relationship constitutes a classic case of a mutually-beneficial two-way street, one that enhances the economies and defense of both countries and benefits Israeli and American taxpayers alike. JE

The Israeli Government Has Lasted a Year; Was it Worth it?

BY ARIEL KAHANA

Like a terminally ill patient who has defied a doctor's predictions, the government led by Foreign Minister Yair Lapid and Prime Minister Naftali Bennett is rounding out a year in office. From the prime minister on down, the sense is that the end could come at any time. Meanwhile, willpower and miracles are keeping the patient alive, for who knows how long.

Despite these difficult political circumstances, the government is seeing not inconsiderable success. Much of it rests on former Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's time in office, like the quiet in the Gaza Strip since "Operation Guardian of the Walls," the improved economic situation, low energy prices, Israel's freedom of action in Syria and — according to foreign reports — Iran and, of course, the Abraham Accords. Lapid and Bennett have managed not to completely ruin any of these things. Here and there, they even managed to make improvements.

The enormous advantage they enjoy is a very supportive American administration. U.S. President Joe Biden, like other Western leaders — insofar as they have time for us while the war in Ukraine is going on — was and is afraid Netanyahu could come back. Popular wisdom has it that the right can make peace and the left can make war.

As a result, it's relatively easy for Bennett and Lapid to build in Judea and Samaria, approve the Jerusalem Day Flag March, stop the opening of a U.S. consulate for the Palestinians in Jerusalem, hook settlement outposts up to the electric grid and so on. With a record like that, this is no left-wing government.

But, of course, we aren't talking about a right-wing government either. Bennett, Lapid, Defense Minister Benny Gantz and President Isaac Herzog all visited with the leaders of Egypt, Jordan, the Palestinian Authority, the UAE and others earlier this year, hoping to prevent an outbreak of violence. Maybe they naively thought this would work, but their ineffectuality led to the opposite result — a wave of horrific terrorist attacks. The roots of this wave lie in the even more serious malady of this government — its members.

When the coalition includes figures from the Muslim Brotherhood who support terrorism and "the Palestinian struggle," reject our right to exist in Israel and oppose visits by Jews to the Temple Mount, as well as when the government allocates billions to a sector most of whose leaders don't even see themselves as Israeli, it's no wonder that the genie of terrorism escaped the bottle. Jewish weakness causes Arab terrorism. That's the way it's always been.

On the other hand, in light of this fundamental flaw, the current government is the first one to recognize how serious a problem the country has with Israeli-Arab governability. Glossing over the problem, which was neglected for years, is no longer an option, and that's good. The steps taken thus far are the first ones, but they are important, for both the Jews and the Arabs.

There are other hints of positive action: raising the retirement age for women, integrating haredim into the workforce, easing regulation and imports, raising soldiers' salaries, laying optic fibers, addressing the issue of religion and state and more.

However, many reforms have stalled, and some will do harm in the long term. The cost of real estate and food is sky-high. The education minister is contributing to future generations' illiteracy. The transportation minister is busy with politics and gender and not in command of the field. These things are causing damage we will only feel years from now.

In terms of how the government is functioning, its report card isn't too bad. Still, there is nothing in it to redeem this government's original sin — the lie on which it is based.

Bennett duped his voters and his partners. He still isn't able to look them in the eye, and he won't be redeemed. Lapid broke the promises he made for years. All simply to oust Bibi.

Was it worth it? It doesn't look that way. The public, according to polls, is unenthusiastic, the political crisis is still here and the country is in chaos. We can't go on like this. But a year into this government, the opposition should learn the lesson that it apparently won't be able to form a different government, with or without elections. The outrage at losing power is understandable. But anger, as we know, isn't a working plan. JE

Jewish Environmental Thought Is Not Ready for the Climate Crisis. But Our Tradition Is

BY DAVID ZVI KALMAN

Smoke from California's fires is regularly bad enough to tint the sun on the other side of the country. Pakistan and India just experienced a devastating heat wave. In the Middle East, temperatures have risen by 1.5 degrees Celsius, more than twice the global average.

Climate change, and its punishing effects, are here, and getting worse, yet Jewish thinking and advocacy on climate change are still stuck in prevention mode. The Jewish organizations that have blossomed to meet the political moment, not to mention the rabbis, activists and rank-and-file Jews who are engaged on this issue, are largely focused on one bottom line: Judaism demands that we care for the planet before it is too late.

This sentiment remains important, and I support it, but it cannot be the only Jewish message for the moment. This is because “we” — the Jewish people — are likely powerless to affect the environment on a scale that would make a difference. It is also because, whether we like it or not, it is too late. As a scholar interested in the Jewish future and as a member of a research team devoted to Judaism and the natural world, I believe it is time to expand our understanding of what “Jewish environmental thought” can be.

The problems with mainstream Jewish approaches to addressing climate change, which scientists say is rapidly approaching a breaking point, are twofold.

First, unlike many other environmental problems, climate change can't be meaningfully curtailed through individual behavior; for better or worse, it is primarily in the hands of national governments and the energy sectors that they regulate. In the United States, it is largely for the worse: Legislative deadlock and the current Supreme Court's deregulatory impulses make it hard to imagine tighter regulations on emissions, and domestic political polarization severely hampers America's ability to exert influence over the 85% of global emissions that are produced outside its borders.

These realities undermine much Jewish thinking on climate change. Rabbis can tell their congregants that they should care for the planet until they're blue in the face, but if their ideas are to be greeted with something other than a nod of agreement, a wistful sigh, and eventual indifference, they cannot solely focus on the possibility of political change.

Second, the “it's too late” piece is harder to hear. Even if humanity radically changes its ways in the next decade, as the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change says it must, disasters aggravated by climate change are already here, and many people — especially young people — operate under the assumption that they will get worse.

Despite this, messages from Jewish leaders largely continue to focus on prevention, frequently insinuating in the process that climate catastrophe is on us if we fail to act. Such messages were appropriate in the 1980s, when disaster merely loomed on the horizon. Now, however, this line of thinking will increasingly be heard as nothing more than a grand “I told you so.”

Jewish educators and leaders must understand that new ideas are crucial because environmental fatalism has already become the accepted wisdom.

We can address both of these problems by expanding our conception of what Jewish environmental thought is supposed to be. Even as we continue to push for sensible climate policy, we must make realistic plans to greet the future, as well. Rather than doubling down on messages of prevention and personal responsibility, hoping to achieve a better result perhaps by being more emphatic about it, Jewish environmentalism must help people adapt to the stresses of our warmer world, offer consolation to those who are mourning the one that we are losing, and prevent us from treating the present climate as “normal” by reminding us of the truly normal climate that will soon be out of living memory.

The Jewish tradition is already well suited for these tasks. As examples: rabbinic Judaism's central narrative about moral failure leading to the loss of a land bears a striking similarity to the contemporary climate crisis, and the long process by which all types of Judaism dealt with that tragedy speaks to its ability to reinvent itself around a story of loss and recovery, a story which has served it well through other periods of persecution. In terms of memorializing tragedy, Jewish tradition continues to commemorate events that took place more than two millennia ago, and the imperative to never forget continues to be highly motivating.

An expanded Jewish environmentalism also offers us the chance to reconsider a basic question: Is this line of thinking for the benefit of the world, or just for other Jews? While politically minded environmental thought is strongly incentivized to spread universal messages, it does so by focusing on stories that Christians and Muslims will find relatable — Adam being charged with stewarding the world, Noah and the flood — and ignoring a much larger set of stories and ideas that are particular to Jewish tradition. The proposed new kinds of thinking might ironically be better capable of speaking specifically to Jewish interests, developing ideas about how to adapt to a changed planet that draws from the particulars of Jewish history.

Shifting Jewish environmental thought in this direction is not without its risks. As with any strategy that takes climate change to be inevitable, this line of thought could be accused of propagating a dangerous fatalism and sapping environmental activism of its energy.

The risks are serious, but Jewish educators and leaders must understand that new ideas are crucial because environmental fatalism has already become the accepted wisdom. Many young people already assume that their entire lives will play out in a world of radical climatic decay, and this plays a powerful dampening effect in their ambitions to change even non-environmental aspects of the world. Jewish environmental thought, like the environment, is out of time.

It is time to embrace this reality and think about the subject anew. JE

Detroit Church Father Coughlin Founded Hosts Jewish-Catholic Relations Event

The National Shrine of the Little Flower — founded by notorious antisemite Father Charles Coughlin — hosted on May 31 an event titled “The Jewish-Catholic Relationship: Past, Present, and Future,” a series of historical lectures co-sponsored by the Archdiocese of Detroit and the local Jewish Community Relations Council, JTA reported.

Jews and Catholics alike filed into the pews in Royal Oak, Michigan, to hear two academics, one Jewish and one Catholic, discuss the history of relations between the two faiths, most of it revolving around Catholic antisemitism.

The choice of venue was deliberate.

“There’s so much polarization in our society, we need this reconciliation in general,” Rabbi Asher Lopatin, executive director of the Detroit JCRC/AJC, told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. “What’s more powerful than for Jews and Catholics to come together in Father Coughlin’s church?”

The pairing of organizations made for an interesting historical wrinkle: The Detroit JCRC/AJC was originally founded in 1937, and one of its first orders of business was to publicly oppose Coughlin’s broadcasts as antisemitic.

Meanwhile, the Archdiocese of Detroit supported and protected Coughlin for the first decade of his broadcasting career, until 1937, when the death of the area’s bishop, combined with Coughlin’s escalating bad press, led the Vatican to appoint a new bishop who worked more aggressively to control the Radio Priest’s rhetoric.

Survey: Americans Not Paying Attention to BDS Movement

A Pew Research Center survey released on May 26 found that American adults are just not paying attention to the boycott, divestment and sanctions movement against Israel, JTA reported.

A whopping 84% of adults surveyed said they have heard “not much” or “nothing at all” about the movement, which seeks to pressure Israel into changing its policy toward the Palestinians by promoting boycotts and economic sanctions.

Only 5% of the surveyed adults — who were of diverse religious backgrounds — knew “some” about it, and only 2% strongly support it.

Pew used an online panel to survey 10,441 U.S. adults from March 7 to 13, with the stated goal of better understanding Americans’ views of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. The margin of error for the full sample was 1.5 percentage points.

EV Sales Rise Sharply in Israel

In the first five months of 2022, 5.2% of all cars sold in Israel, or 6,900 cars, were electric vehicles, compared to just 1.2% in the same period in 2021, Globes reported.

Globes said the EV market would have grown faster if there weren’t delivery delays of Tesla cars because of COVID lockdowns in China.

Car industry sources said there is a backlog of more than 12,000 orders for EV, which should comprise about 8% of new car sales.

Israel will increase by 10% its purchase tax on electric vehicles starting in January. Those increases will apply to 2022 orders delayed beyond the end of 2022.

Aliyah from Ethiopia Resumes

After more than a year of delays, aliyah resumed from Ethiopia on June 1 with 181 immigrants arriving at Ben Gurion Airport, The Times of Israel reported.

Some of the immigrants had waited for decades to reunite with their families. The flight was the first since March 2021.

Another 160 immigrants arrived the next day, with additional flights expected in the coming months. The Israeli government approved last year bringing 3,000 new immigrants from war-torn Ethiopia. The Jewish Agency said they will all arrive by November.

Since the covert Operation Solomon ended in 1991 — with the vast majority of the Beta Israel community being brought to Israel, the government has sporadically decided to bring over those left behind. They often are referred to as Falash Mura — converts to Christianity because of coercion or fears of persecution — and not considered eligible for aliyah under the Law of Return. JE

Jewish Leaders Tackle Complications of Gun Violence

SASHA ROGELBERG | STAFF WRITER

The mass shooting at Robb Elementary School in Uvalde, Texas, where a gunman killed 19 children and two teachers, feels like it happened long ago, with May 24 a date in ancient history.

In its place have been headlines of mass shootings in Charleston, South Carolina; Tulsa, Oklahoma; and more recently, on South Street in Philadelphia on June 4, where three were killed and 11 injured — each event replacing the previous one as front-page news.

These events are more than just a drop in the bucket of statistics used to make an argument for or against access to guns. Their impact remains visceral to those personally touched by gun violence.

"You can't go outside no more; you're scared to turn the corner; you don't want to go anywhere," said Oronde McClain, a Philadelphia resident who was shot at age 10. "And it is a burden to the family. You can have a beautiful day; you could have went to a cookout. Now, you have to take medicine; you're scared because you could have a seizure. There's a lot of things that one bullet could do to a family."

McClain was a speaker on a June 3 Philadelphia Jewish Family and Children's Service panel discussing the impact of gun violence on the community, the individual and policy.

Jewish leaders around the country, like many others, have expressed their distress about continued gun violence in the United States.

"For thousands of years, we, as a Jewish people have discussed the epidemic of violence towards other people," said Rabbi Kelly Levy of Austin, Texas, which is about 160 miles from Uvalde. "It comes all the way from the Talmud, when we are taught that to destroy one life is as though you have destroyed the entire world, and to save one life is as though you have saved the world."

Though Jewish thought takes a clear stance against violence, with a mounting death count and growing frustration with political gridlock, addressing gun violence is both urgent and vexing.

"I am never surprised anymore, but I am just waiting for, frankly, the next mass shooting because what we know is that our society refuses to deal with this crisis," said Adam Garber, executive director of CeaseFirePA, an interfaith and interdisciplinary coalition of leaders against gun violence.

There are already more than 200 homicides in 2022 in Philadelphia, according to Garber, putting the year on pace to be one of the most violent recorded. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, there were 45,222 firearm-related deaths in 2020, making it among the top five causes of death for those 1-44 years old.

The COVID era is associated with an increase in gun violence prevalence. Firearms sales skyrocketed, increasing 49% from 2019 to 2020, a Pennsylvania State Police report said. Pandemic restrictions and economic disruptions meant that fewer social services, such as recreation centers, were accessible to people.

Joshua Horwitz, co-director of the Center for Gun Violence Solutions at the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health who also spoke on the JFCS panel, suggested a multifaceted approach to addressing gun violence: "It's a puzzle, which means that to solve it, you need a puzzle as well, different types of solutions."

Beefing up firearm purchase licensing laws, limiting magazines to fewer than 10 rounds and appropriately enforcing red flag laws — which allow for the temporary confiscation of firearms from someone who may pose a risk to themselves or others — are all parts of the puzzle, Horwitz said.

Through a public health approach to mitigating gun violence, the social variables that drive gun violence must also be addressed, which include exposure to domestic violence, guns and drugs. Providing additional support to those at high rates of exposure to these risk factors can help decrease the likelihood of those people acquiring and using a gun.

For gun owners and advocates for easier gun access, mass shootings are no less of a tragedy.

But guns aren't the problem, Jewish armed security guard Grant Schmidt argues. A combination of low police morale and lax background checks are responsible for mass shootings at schools, he said. The Police Executive Research Forum, in a survey of more than 200 departments, found a 45% increase in retirements and a 20% increase in resignations in 2020-2021.

"A lot of my clients have told me stories that they called the police when something violent was happening, and the police never showed," Schmidt said.

In the case of Uvalde, Schmidt said, the shooter should never have been allowed to own a gun, per his background of violence towards animals and family members.

"He should have been 302-ed (involuntarily committed to a hospital, crisis center or psychiatric institution), adjudicated mentally defective and never been able to pass a background check, but that law was not enforced," Schmidt said.

Instead, in addition to greater enforcement of background checks (which, if they are enforced, are already strict enough, Schmidt said), Schmidt advocates for the elimination of gun-free zones, which, per a 1990 law, prohibit the use of loaded and unconcealed firearms in or near public elementary and high schools.

"It's so frustrating to me that we're still treating police officers like first responders," Schmidt said. "They're second responders. The targets of attacks — we are the first responders."

Levy, whose synagogue, Congregation Beth Israel, experienced an antisemitic arson attack in October, is asking questions about how to move forward after shootings and violent attacks, examining the role in on-campus security at her synagogue, which increased after the arson.

Gun control activists rally in Harrisburg at the general assembly building.

"This goes towards that culture shift in what would eventually and hopefully become a society where we don't need to protect ... we don't require our security guards at every Shabbat service, or even on a daily basis, because there wouldn't be people out there who could come in and inflict harm on the people who are in our building," Levy said. "The reality is, that until that day comes, we need to do what we can to protect our children and keep them safe."

Horwitz believes that providing additional security to a place of worship while advocating for gun control are not mutually exclusive: "That's not dissonant; that's the reality. The problem is that our security, unfortunately, only takes us so far."

Uvalde, like other schools and synagogues, had armed security that did not prevent attacks with assault weapons. They do, however, create a feeling of safety that is welcome in times of profound uncertainty, Levy said.

To other gun control advocates like Garber and Horwitz, increased security, particularly increased gun accessibility for citizens, is a false solution.

"How many guns are going to make us safe? There are more guns than there are people in this country — what point is that? Is it 400 million? 500 million guns? Is it a billion guns?" Garber said. "At some point, we just have to decide this path we're on is not really doing anything but killing our children." JE

Matisyahu to Perform at Barrack 75th Anniversary

JARRAD SAFFREN | STAFF WRITER

The Jack M. Barrack Hebrew Academy in Bryn Mawr is turning 75 this year.

And as the oldest pluralistic Jewish secondary school in the United States, it is inviting a pluralistic Jewish rapper to help celebrate.

Matisyahu, who grew up in the Reconstructionist denomination and famously joined the Chabad movement as his career took off in the 2000s (and who has since shaved his long beard, embracing a more relaxed approach to religion) will headline Barrack's 75th anniversary party on June 12 on campus.

From 5-7 p.m., the school formerly known as the Akiba Hebrew Academy will host an outdoor festival with carnival games, crafts and a kosher food truck for students, parents and alumni. Around 7 p.m., the rapper and reggae singer, whose seventh and latest studio album, "Matisyahu," came out in March, will take the stage.

It's a homecoming of sorts for the singer, who was born in a Bryn Mawr hospital. But he only spent a month or two in the area before moving to California with his parents.

Nonetheless, he's excited to return and help Barrack mark its big 7-5.

"Judaism can be practiced and celebrated in so many different ways, and it is very special to me to be a part of the anniversary of a school who was so ahead of its time in terms of its respect for women in our religion," Matisyahu said via email.

Barrack prides itself on that core value that the singer espoused.

Pluralistic means nondenominational, and to Head of School Marshall Lesack, nondenominational means openness to students and families from all different Jewish backgrounds.

But Lesack, a 1997 Akiba alum who has been in his position for only a year, is quick to point out that the school's core value predates his tenure. It goes back to Akiba's founding in post-war America.

Lesack believes that the institution has lived its mission and welcomed Jews from all different backgrounds over the years. It has graduated almost 3,000 students, many of whom have gone on to great things.

You could build a whole trivia game around Barrack's list of notable alums, who include Pennsylvania gubernatorial candidate and Attorney General Josh Shapiro, CNN anchor Jake Tapper and Boston Red Sox Chief Baseball Officer Chaim Bloom, who will speak at the school's graduation ceremony the day after the concert.

"I believe that as a Jewish people and as a Jewish world, we exist in different stripes and perspectives," Lesack said. "We need to find communities where we work toward togetherness even as we approach things differently."

Matisyahu's Jewish journey has been about engaging with different sects of the faith and using each one to grow as an individual.

After growing up Reconstructionist, he abandoned the religion for many years. Then, as he wrote on his website in 2011, reflecting on his journey over the past decade, he found his way back to Judaism because he felt like he "needed rules." In that same post, he also said that he felt like he no longer needed so many rules.

"I am reclaiming myself," the musician wrote. "Trusting my goodness and my divine mission."

Without pluralism, there is no Matisyahu. And without pluralism, there is no Barrack, either.

The singer wants to convey that feeling — of giving your open mind over to the journey — with the songs he performs on June 12.

"I'm looking forward to playing the songs that so many of you all love and have history with as well as hopefully teaching some about the beauty and spirituality found in improvisation i.e. being in the moment and letting the music guide us," he said.

For Barrack students and parents, the feeling is mutual. They are looking forward to embracing the moment and the music.

"I love a lot of his music, and a lot of his songs are staples at Barrack and in my grade," said Aiden Sandler, a Barrack junior. "Especially on bus rides. It's a great time."

"It's really nice to have vibrant and fun music that is rooted in Jewish tradition and that celebrates Jewish values and Jewish experience," added Yoella Epstein, a Barrack parent, alum and board member.

"We thought it would be fun to have a headliner. Matisyahu was the icing on the cake," said Lisa Sandler, Aiden's mom and the chair of the school's board. "People love him. It's a fun opportunity."

Tickets for the event are $36 and can be ordered on Barrack's website at jbha.org/. Click the icon that pops up when you land on the page. JE

LINDA MOREL | SPECIAL TO THE JE

At the dawn of the 20th century, observant Jewish women made pie crusts and other pastries using rendered chicken fat as shortening!

They actually fried chicken skins until yellow fat oozed into the pan — which sounds so savory and Old World. But this shortening complied with the Kashrut Laws, which forbid mixing dairy products and meat at the same meal. Because butter wasn't an option for kosher housewives serving meat, what else could they do but turn to schmaltz, glistening chicken fat?

In 1911, Crisco burst on the scene as an all-vegetable shortening. Procter & Gamble, its manufacturer, proudly promoted Crisco as a kosher food, one that performed as well as satiny butter but could be used freely with meat. As extraordinary as a one-day supply of oil that lasted eight days, the company boldly announced, "Crisco was the miracle for which the Jews have waited four thousand years."

Soon synonymous with superior pie crusts, Crisco became a life-altering, game changer for kosher bakers. Its grand entry into kosher kitchens made modern pie crusts feasible for assimilating Jewish women who wanted to remain observant while baking all-American pies.

To this day, a slice of pie and its tempting crust are pictured on Crisco containers, indicating to consumers that the finest crusts start with Crisco shortening. Crust aficionados agree that Crisco produces the lightest, flakiest pie crusts, even more so than butter whose crusts are a bit brittle.

Since its introduction, Crisco has been a liberator, an equalizer that offered kosher women the opportunity to make pareve pies that compete with the puffiest, most delicate crusts in America.

Pie Crust | Pareve

To use with all the pie filling recipes below:

Equipment:

- Regular size (4-cup) pie pan, not deep dish
- Preferably a stand mixer with paddle attachment, or an electric beater with firm beater attachments
- 1 pound large dried beans, such as chickpeas, or pie weights
- Rolling pin

Ingredients:

- Nonstick vegetable spray
- 2 cups flour, plus more for sprinkling
- $\frac{3}{4}$  teaspoon granulated salt, not kosher salt
- $\frac{1}{2}$  teaspoon sugar
- $\frac{3}{4}$  cup Crisco, chilled for 12 hours or more
- 3-6 tablespoons ice water

Coat the pie pan with nonstick spray. Sift the flour, salt and sugar into a large bowl. Reserve.

With a soup spoon, scoop the Crisco into about 5 chunks. Place the chunks in the bowl of a stand mixer or a second large mixing bowl. Using the paddle attachment or electric mixer's firm beaters, beat the flour mixture into the Crisco, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  cup at a time, starting at a low speed and going to medium-high as the two are incorporated. Beat for about 30 seconds, or until the mixture resembles coarse sand.

Add the ice water, a tablespoon at a time, beating in between each addition. When the mixture turns into chunks of dough, it is ready. You may not need all of the ice water.

Form the dough into two balls. Roll them in your palms to get rid of as many seams or cracks as possible. Then, using your palms, flatten the balls into disks about 3-4 inches in diameter. Refrigerate them for at least 30 minutes before rolling.

Preheat your oven to 450 degrees F.

To roll dough: Place parchment paper on the counter. Remove one dough disk from the refrigerator, and place it in the center of the parchment paper. Sprinkle a little flour on the rolling pin.

Flatten the dough disk slightly with the rolling pin. Then, rolling from the center toward the edges, continue to flatten the dough.

Do not roll back and forth, as the dough will tear. If it tears, you can fix it by pressing dough together with your fingers around the tear.

Roll the dough into an amoeba-shaped circle about  $\frac{1}{8}$ -inch thick, slightly larger than the pie pan. Place a piece of aluminum foil over half of the dough circle. Fold it in half, parchment paper and all. Turn it upside down, and place the semicircle of dough along the pie pan's midline. Gently pull away the parchment and foil and nudge the dough into place. Fix any tears with your fingers.

Mixed Berry Pie Filling | Pareve

Serves 8

- 2 cups fresh strawberries
- 1½ cups fresh blueberries
- 1½ cups fresh raspberries
- ¾ cup sugar
- 1½ teaspoon flour
- ⅛ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
- ¼ teaspoon cinnamon

Rinse the berries under cold water. Lay them out on paper towels to dry. Hull the strawberries, and cut them into halves or quarters, if they are large.

Place all the berries in a large mixing bowl. Add the remaining ingredients. With a wooden or silicone spoon utensil, gently mix them until well combined. Spoon the berry mixture into the crust-lined pie pan. Cover the berries with the top crust. Bake for 1 hour, or until the crust is golden brown.

Cool for 15 minutes or more before serving.

Ginger Peach Pie Filling | Pareve

Serves 8

- 1-inch fresh ginger root
- 6 peaches
- ½ cup sugar
- 1½ teaspoon flour
- ⅛ teaspoon salt
- 2 teaspoons lemon juice
- ¼ teaspoon vanilla

Peel the ginger. Dice it and then chop it finely.

Cut the peaches in half. Discard the pits, and peel them. Slice the peaches thin.

Place the ginger and peaches in a large mixing bowl. Add the remaining ingredients. With a wooden or silicone spoon utensil, gently mix ingredients until well combined. Spoon the mixture into the crust-lined pie pan. Cover the peaches with the top crust. Bake for 1 hour, or until the crust is golden brown.

Cool for 15 minutes or more before serving. JE the dough, including on the pan's edges. Gently press the foil into the shape of the pan. Pour the beans or pie weights into the foil liner. Move it into the oven, and bake for 12-15 minutes, until the dough is turning golden.

Remove the pie pan from the oven. Lift the foil off the crust, and let it rest while you slice the fruit. The beans can be used again for pie crusts but not for cooking.

Fill the pie with fruit from one of the recipes below. Remove the second disk of dough from the refrigerator and follow the dough-rolling directions above. Cover the fruit with the second circle of dough, which will be the top crust. Press the top crust into the bottom crust to seal them. Cut slits in a couple of places in the top crust.

Apple Spice Pie Filling | Pareve

Serves 8

- 5 baking apples, such as Granny Smith, Gala, Fuji or Pink Lady
- ½ cup sugar
- 1½ teaspoon flour
- ½ teaspoon cinnamon
- ⅛ teaspoon allspice
- ⅛ teaspoon cardamom
- ⅛ teaspoon salt
- 1½ teaspoons lemon juice

Peel, core and slice the apples thin. Place them in a large mixing bowl. Add the remaining ingredients. With a wooden or silicone spoon utensil, gently mix them until well combined. Spoon the apple mixture into the crust-lined pie pan. Cover the apples with the top crust. Bake for 1 hour, or until the crust is golden brown.

Cool for 15 minutes or more before serving.

RJC President, Educator Howard Cohen Dies at 81

BY HEATHER M. ROSS | STAFF WRITER

Howard A. Cohen, 81, a teacher who worked under two presidents, served as president of the Greater Philadelphia Republican Jewish Committee and was deeply committed to Israel, died on May 21.

"Howard was a Republican who yearned for the days when Republicans and Democrats could speak civilly to each other, and I was a Democrat who yearned for the same," said Ben Picker, a best friend for nearly 50 years and the godfather to his daughter, Sarah.

From 1971 to 1972 Cohen worked as a staff assistant to President Richard Nixon's White House Counsel Charles Colson and also worked in the Ford administration. He had a stint as secretary of revenue for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, too.

Cohen was a longtime member of Har Zion Temple, where he served as president of its Men's Club for a time and espoused his love for Israel.

"He cared very much about Israel and about Judaism. The biggest thing he wanted was to see my daughter bat mitzvah," Sarah Cohen said.

Cohen held positions as the executive vice president/CEO of ORT America and vice president/CEO of Operation Independence, which promoted economic growth in Israel.

"He was an adamant supporter of Israel and the survival of the Jewish people," Picker said.

Professionally, Cohen was the founding chair of the Public Management Department at the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School and taught for many years at the Fels School of Government.

He also was involved with Temple University's Fox School of Business in multiple capacities for more than 15 years; that included teaching courses on business ethics and negotiation, serving as associate dean of development, helping with fundraising and serving as the executive director of Temple's Dialogue Institute.

The institute is a nonprofit organization dedicated to promoting interfaith and intercultural dialogue by conducting seminars for young leaders from around the world and introducing young people to many faiths, according to Majid Alsayegh, a longtime colleague of Cohen's.

Cohen brought government experience to the board of the Dialogue Institute, which he served on before becoming the executive director and again afterward. While on the board, he pushed for the teaching of ethics to be incorporated into the teaching of religion and faith.

"He always spoke his mind and spoke up when something needed to be said. He was a voice of reason who added value when he spoke," Alsayegh said.

He pushed for the board to bring on members of color and diverse faiths because the institute respected celebrations of diverse faiths and ethnicities; Cohen believed the board should reflect that, Alsayegh said.

According to friends and family, bringing people of diverse ideas together was an important part of who Cohen was.

"He loved the idea of bringing people to the table," Sarah Cohen said.

Cohen believed economic security for Israel was a crucial part of ensuring the survival of the Jewish people, which was reflected in his involvement with Operation Independence.

Cohen was born in Newark, New Jersey, on Feb. 10, 1941.

He received a master's of business administration in international business and transportation from George Washington University and both a law degree and a bachelor of arts in political science and economics from Rutgers University.

Later, he married his wife, Barbara, on July 8, 1972.

Cohen was dedicated to teaching, believed in education and wanted to help people improve themselves and succeed, according to Sarah Cohen. Because of the pandemic, he learned to use and teach on Zoom at 78 — all while fulfilling his duties as a grandfather.

"My dad wrote letters to my daughter, who is 11 years old. He would send her letters. If she wrote back, he'd send her a dollar. She'll have those letters for the rest of her life," Sarah Cohen said.

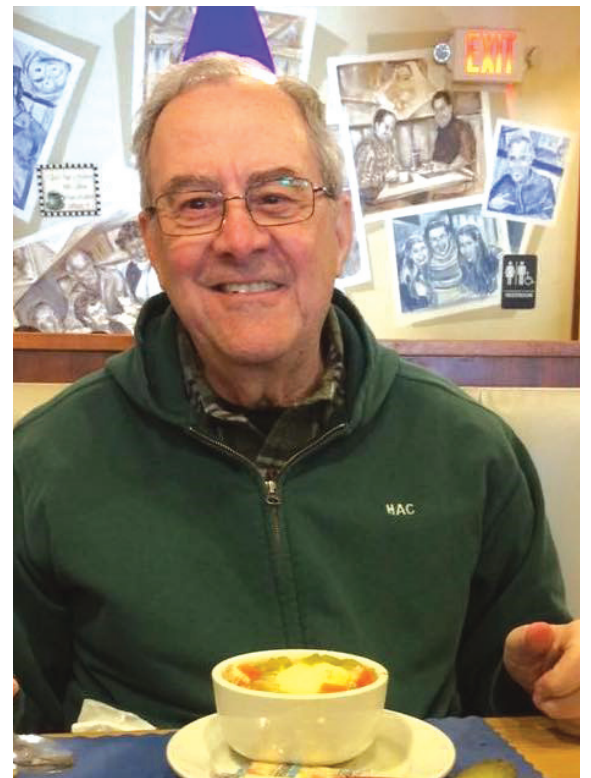

An avid reader, he followed the news every day and read many books on business, economics and other topics.

Hobbies included fishing, reading and woodworking. He built some of his furniture, including the dining table he shared with his wife.

"They used to sit and have breakfast together every morning. They sat and read the paper together," Sarah Cohen said.

Cohen is survived by his wife, Barbara; his son, David; his daughter, Sarah; son-in-law, Jon; and two grandchildren. JE

Former Maccabi USA President Bob Spivak Dies at 85

GALL SIGLER | SPECIAL TO THE JE

Robert “Bob” Spivak, the former president of Maccabi USA and an International Jewish Sports Hall of Fame inductee, died on May 25. He was 85.

Spivak was born in Philadelphia in 1936 and attended Central High School. After graduating from Muhlenberg College, he embarked on a lifelong career at the investment firm CMS Cos. He retired to Yorktown, Virginia.

In 1977, Spivak visited Israel with two friends and attended the Maccabiah Games.

“He was very moved by that experience,” his son, Michael Spivak, said.

Upon returning to the United States, Spivak became determined to revamp the United States Committee Sports for Israel, which was responsible for sending Jewish American athletes to the games. The organization “did not have a lot of funding and was not well-known at the time,” Michael Spivak said.

Together with a few friends, Spivak assembled an organizing committee. They moved the organization from New York to Philadelphia. In 1981, he became the organization’s president, a position he held for two decades. That, he believed, was his greatest success.

In the interview Maccabi USA conducted with Spivak, he called the organization “a second family.”

Spivak was committed to providing an opportunity for Jewish athletes to compete in the Maccabiah Games. As president of Maccabi USA, the successor of the United States Committee Sports for Israel, Spivak oversaw a substantial increase in the number of American athletes participating in the Maccabiah Games — from 350 in 1981 to 600 in 2001, per the International Jewish Sports Hall of Fame.

“Bringing Jewish athletes to Israel was his love and his passion,” Michael Spivak said.

Bob Spivak

Together with the Maccabi World Union and the JCC Association of North America, Spivak helped develop the Maccabi Sports Camps. The camps, held locally throughout the United States, increased awareness among Jewish communities about the Maccabiah Games and Maccabi USA at large.

Spivak viewed the Maccabiah Games as more than a sports event.

“Marching into Ramat Gan stadium and tens of thousands of Jews cheering” encapsulated the importance of the Maccabiah Games to him, Michael Spivak said. While he grew up in a non-practicing environment, Judaism was central to Spivak’s life.

“He believed that Judaism was a brotherhood, and he found a way that he could connect in his own way to Judaism and Israel,” Michael Spivak said.

Spivak was committed to the betterment of society through sports. During his tenure as president, Maccabi USA supported the Israel (Ilan) Sports Centre for the Physically Disabled, as well the opening of a sports and recreation facility in Ben Shimon Forest in Modi’in, Israel, in 1994.

Throughout his time as president, Spivak spearheaded the Maccabiah Games Pre-Camp, which aimed at providing participants with a cultural experience in Israel — in addition to an athletic one. Every senior athlete competing in the games arrives in Israel for a week-long educational program learning about Israeli history and culture.

“He strongly believed it was not just about going and competing; he wanted a full immersion in Israel, culturally and historically,” Michael Spivak said.

In an interview on the Maccabi USA YouTube channel, Spivak said of the pre-camp program, “We hoped that would be enriching in some way for the kids’ lives ... what we did not realize is that it would also enrich our lives.”

Perhaps the most significant challenge Spivak faced as president came during the Second Intifada in 2001. Due to security concerns in Israel, the Maccabi USA board was split as to whether it was safe for American athletes to attend the Maccabiah Games.

Spivak “felt strongly, after consulting with all the board members, that the organization should go through with it” and participate. Eventually, the games were held as planned, with the American delegation present.

“It was a celebration of support for Israel,” Michael Spivak said.

In 2001, in recognition of Spivak’s “significant contributions to the State of Israel and society through sports,” he received the Lifetime Achievement Award from the International Jewish Sports Hall of Fame.

Spivak also became the first non-Israeli named president of the World Maccabiah Games in 2013.

Beyond his work with Maccabi USA, Spivak was involved in the Jewish community and was a board affiliate in the Anti-Defamation League, Jewish National Fund, Jewish Community Centers of Philadelphia and Boys Town Jerusalem.

Spivak is survived by his wife, Ann Taylor Hogge; siblings Joel and Lynn; children; and grandchildren. JE

What's happening at ... Beth Sholom Congregation

Beth Sholom Congregation Celebrates Storied Roots

SASHA ROGELBERG | STAFF WRITER

Architect Frank Lloyd Wright died on April 9, 1959, just five months before the completion of one of his final projects.

The project, along with being a last of sorts, was also a first: Beth Sholom Congregation, tucked away in the suburbs of Elkins Park, became the Chicago-based architect's first and only synagogue design.

Though the synagogue was founded more than 40 years prior in 1918, Beth Sholom is still known best for its informal moniker as the "Frank Lloyd Wright synagogue," but its famous building is not the congregation's only talking point.

With 450 member families, including 70 families with children enrolled in the synagogue's Brodie Family Early Learning Center preschool, Beth Sholom's membership has remained robust. It has an active religious school, an additional chapel, where most of its services are held, and consistent programming.

On June 1-4, the Beth Sholom Synagogue Preservation Foundation (a separate, but related, entity from the congregation) cosponsored historic preservation nonprofit Docomomo's 2022 National Symposium in Philadelphia.

"We also have made a name for ourselves in the preservation and architecture world for buildings that are significant and that are multiuse because, certainly, Beth Sholom is a synagogue first and a congregation first, but we also do, and have the ability to, host and be a space," said Beth Sholom Synagogue Preservation Foundation Director of Tours and Marketing Jill Rosen.

The space is home to two arts exhibits: one featuring local artist David Hart and the other, Andrew Pielage, a photographer specializing in images of Wright creations. The preservation foundation offers tours of the Wright building, which was deemed a National Historic Landmark in 2007.

Beth Sholom Congregation was founded in 1918, but it is known for its Frank Lloyd Wright-designed building erected in 1959.

While the synagogue's architectural prominence has afforded it opportunities to connect with outside organizations through its preservation foundation, it also serves a spiritual purpose for the congregation.

Features of the synagogue's Wright-designed building were constructed with prayer in mind.

"The sloping floors are kind of you being cupped in the hands of God as you enter that physical space, and the white carpet is kind of the sands of the wilderness," Rabbi David Glanzberg-Krainin said.

When Wright designed the space with Beth Sholom founding Rabbi Mortimer J. Cohen, they considered how light would filter in the space, creating intricate, stacked glass work.

During the Ne'ilah service on Yom Kippur, the last of the day's five services before break fast, Glanzberg-Krainin is struck by the way the natural light leaves the space after dusk, creating the illusion that the gates are closing — that time to be inscribed in the book of life has run out.

"[Cohen] felt that you perceive God more in less direct ways," Glanzberg-Krainin said of the inspiration for the building.

Few of the synagogue's components were by chance when Cohen was at its helm. Founded at the tail end of World War I, the synagogue, originally at Broad and Courtland streets in Philadelphia, got its namesake as the "house of peace," according to synagogue President Herb Sachs.

As decades passed, area Jews acquired additional wealth and prosperity, resulting in many moving north and to Abington.

"It was in the mid-'50s that they staged their move to Elkins Park and purchased land, and they moved the congregation in stages," Sachs said.

Cohen opted to move the religious school first into the synagogue's now-administrative building. He also pushed for the creation of a swimming pool, hoping the space would become a community center. Sachs would argue that the space would, indeed, become the community's home, though the swimming pool is now defunct.

But if the pool wasn't an indication of Cohen's ambition, what followed certainly was.

Frank Lloyd Wright and founding Rabbi Mortimer Cohen discuss the design details of Beth Sholom's second building in 1959.

"He wanted to build a new vision for an American synagogue, not a traditional synagogue building," Sachs said.

With advice from several people, Cohen contacted Wright, who agreed to design a second building for the synagogue. The two met at the Plaza Hotel in New York, where Wright was staying as he worked on his design for the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum.

Commissioned in 1953, the synagogue's new building was completed six years later.

Though the synagogue's future is secure in its religious and preschool programs, its past is immortalized in its building, with a history that captures a specific moment in the American Jewish narrative.

In a period of integration for many American Jews, a whimsical synagogue that carried a similar panache as was so common in churches was representative of their own complicated identity. Beth Sholom was evidence of Jewish assimilation, but it also augmented the prayer experience, bringing Jews closer to their spirituality and Jewish identity.

"Mortimer Cohen did not want to just do things the old way, just to build a traditional synagogue building," Sachs said. "He wanted to do something special." JE

Parshat Naso

Full disclosure: I love Torah. Deeply. Even at its worst.

Our parshah describes a marriage gone sideways. The visual image of this scenario in the wilderness is a wind of jealousy sweeping over the husband (Num. 5:14). He suspects his wife of infidelity, but he can't prove it. He accuses, and she denies. What are the options?

He could divorce her. That's radical — after all, her denials might be genuine. Plus, divorce requires paying the woman a divorce settlement as stipulated in all marriage contracts.

They could talk. But they've tried talking. He accuses and she, once again, denies. The wind of jealousy continues to blow. No teapot is safe from a tempest.

He could publicly accuse her of a secret tryst. She will be mortified, and if she is found innocent of wrongdoing, he will be humiliated as well. The elimination of doubt, however, makes the ordeal worthwhile.

He brings her to the Jerusalem Temple, and a priest mixes water, dirt and the dissolved ink of an incantation. The priest's use of the four-letter name of God quickens the conditional curse of the bitter waters. The woman says, "Amen. Amen." She drinks from the goblet with all eyes upon her.

Should she be innocent, she will be blessed with child. But should she have been unfaithful, the waters will turn bitter as they enter her defiled vessel. Her moral impurity will poison her from the inside out. Whatever seed that might be within will be expelled, and she'll be rendered infertile forever.

And they live happily ever after. The end.

Maybe she'll belch from the yucky water. She'll feel vindicated, and he'll feel like a jerk and buy her chocolates and flowers to make it up to her.

What's to love about this? The Torah figured out a way to keep the couple together by allowing the husband's jealousy to blow over. If the wife really had been unfaithful, she gets off easy. The punishment for adultery, when it can be proven, is death. The Mishnah brings in its own deus ex machina.

Let's say Betsy, her neighbor, heard the headboard banging against their common wall. Both Betsy and the adulteress might wonder: "Are these bitter waters just psychodrama therapy?" The Mishnah anticipates such a question by revealing that if the adulteress had a whole slew of good deeds under her belt, so to speak, the effects of the bitter waters might be suspended for up to three years.

But now the rabbis are in a pickle. If women know of that exemption, some might become righteous sluts. But if they don't know, some might suspect that the ordeal is just for show. As I said, I love Torah!

If we pull back the camera to see how other ancient Near Eastern cultures deal with their jealous husbands, we'll notice that their water ordeals involve rivers and drowning. Even though the bitter waters are ugly, there was uglier.

When I declare my love for Torah, sometimes what I mean is that I love how the rabbis of the Mishnah and Talmud interpret the Torah in ways that make it seem like they're just as bothered with the patriarchy and misogyny of certain texts as I am.

The Mishnah begins its explanation with its own act of interpretive magic: The rabbis transform the Torah's jealousy into a warning that the husband issues his wife against being secluded with a certain man, Ploni.

This warning, to have legal force, must be issued in front of two witnesses. In order for the husband to bring his wife to the priest in Jerusalem, not only must she be warned, but there must be additional witness that she then secluded herself with Ploni. She was warned, and she persisted.

The Mishnah neutralizes the over-reactive husband and gives the woman the opportunity to avoid the ordeal. For me, that was the obvious injustice that the Mishnah needed to address. It is the next act of interpretation that makes me so proud to be an heir to this radically righteous tradition.

What about Ploni? The paramour goes unmentioned in the Torah, but the rabbis drag him back in, kicking and screaming. The Torah's Ploni gorges on forbidden fruit without consequence. But in the Mishnah, if the woman was guilty, so was Ploni, and he suffers the same consequences at the same time. Gender parity through gender parody.

It boggles my mind when my rabbinic colleagues argue their point by saying, "But, it is written ..." and leave it at that. What is written is a snapshot of how Jewish values were applied in that moment in that place. Our job as rabbis, and as Jews, is not to idolize the text by turning it into an object of stone but to plant its values in our soil. The rabbis knew that for the Torah not to become petrified wood, it had to be a Tree of Life. JE

1 On May 25, the Jewish Resident's Council of Ann's Choice hosted Robin Burstein of the Anti-Defamation League to discuss antisemitism. 2 Levi Gornish, a 2021 graduate of Kohelet Yeshiva High School, won the Reichman University Israel Idol competition in May. 3 Former Chief Rabbi of the State of Israel Rabbi Israel Meir Lau visited Lower Merion Synagogue and spent a Shabbat with the community. 4 Temple Menorah-Keneseth Chai celebrated its 97th anniversary with a spring gala on May 27. 5 OROT held its annual gala on May 11 and honored the Lane family. 6 Jack M. Barrack Hebrew Academy students Jordana Harwitz and Niva Cohen organized a vigil for the 21 victims of the recent school shooting in Uvalde, Texas.

Ron Klasko

HONORED WITH HIAS PA GOLDEN DOOR AWARD

SASHA ROGELBERG | STAFF WRITER

Early in lawyer Ron Klasko's career, he traveled to Hawaii for a conference, staying at the Hyatt Regency Waikiki Beach Resort and Spa. But he insists he didn't become an immigration lawyer just for the chance to lounge in the sun.

In fact, it appeared no one at that conference did. Upon spending the week there, Klasko realized that none of his fellow lawyers were interested in living it up; they really just wanted to talk immigration law with each other.

"Little did I know when I got out there, that these immigration lawyers were really serious about what they do — morning, afternoon and night, even on a beach in Hawaii," Klasko said. "And that's when I got sold on immigration [law] because I saw these people who are so committed and so much loved what they did and so much cared about their clients."

After four decades as an immigration lawyer — including being the founder and managing partner at Klasko Immigration Law Partners, LLP — Klasko, according to HIAS Pennsylvania, has earned some time in the sun and the spotlight.

Klasko was honored on May 24 at HIAS PA's Golden Door Awards gala for his work in immigration law, as well as the scholarship program he created for HIAS clients, providing financial help to young people to pay for their college education.

In addition to serving as president of the American Immigration Lawyers Association, where he was appointed general counsel, Klasko was also the immigration policy adviser for HIAS and was involved in domestic affairs at the Jewish Community Relations Council. He was part of the committee on the deportation and denaturalization of Nazi war criminals at the National Jewish Community Relations Advisory Council.

But Klasko earned his bread and butter at Klasko Immigration Law Partners, where, in addition to serving individual clients, he helps get visas for workers at hospitals and other companies and for international university students.

"We're known around the country for being the place to go, if all else fails," Klasko said.

When Klasko was beginning his career as an immigration lawyer in the 1970s, the concern was mostly around Iranian immigrants, many of whom were students, who left their home country during the Iranian Revolution, in which Iran instated an Islamic republic following the overthrow of the Pahlavi dynasty under Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

During that time, there was also a massive redesign of the American car line to make the American auto industry competitive with its Japanese and European competition. The undertaking demanded thousands of car engineers, creating a labor shortage. Despite that, it was near impossible to get visas for workers abroad to come to America for jobs in the industry.

"I came up with the novel idea ...

where we identified an automotive designer in England who was able to provide about 1,000 automotive design engineers to the U.S.," Klasko said.

Klasko made it happen with the then-novel E2 treaty investor visa.

Despite the case gaining national attention, and despite Klasko's requisite training taking supplemental night classes at Temple University and joining the bar association, he considered himself a neophyte, giving him a sense of honesty and vulnerability when speaking with clients that Klasko believed other lawyers lacked.

"People felt from the beginning that I was honest and tried real hard," Klasko said. "And if the word gets around that there's actually an honest immigration lawyer who's really going to work hard for you, you develop a lot of business."

Klasko was born into a "fairly religious" Conservative Jewish home in Havertown, where his father was a shamash at their synagogue.

His family, like many other Jewish families, considered education to be critical. Klasko paved his path to becoming a lawyer with a law degree from the University of Pennsylvania and a bachelor's from Lehigh University.

In his older age (he declined to state his age, though he feels he's getting younger every year), Klasko wanted to give others the same opportunities he had but that many could not afford.

"When I reached a point in my career, where it was time to give back ... the first thing that came on my mind, to an area where I think I can give back, is helping kids who might otherwise not be able to reach their educational goals, to reach them," Klasko said.

Though the scholarship is in its third year, with three students winning the scholarship each year, this year was the first time Klasko was able to meet the recipients, due to COVID restrictions. Students from Ukraine, China and Uganda, among others, who won the scholarship, greeted Klasko at the HIAS gala, telling him they would not have otherwise been able to go to college.

"That's the payback for the scholarship programs," Klasko said. "It's not financial payback, but it's emotional payback." JE

It's Your Money!

More than $4 billion (yep... that's billion with a "B") is waiting to be claimed from the Pennsylvania Treasury. Some of it may belong to you! 1 in 10 Pennsylvania residents has unclaimed property waiting.

Pennsylvania Treasurer Stacy Garrity is working hard to get that money back to its rightful owners. Search today at PATreasury.gov/unclaimed-property.

(If it's easier for you, email us at tupmail@patreasury.gov or call 800-222-2046.)

Unclaimed property includes things like:

- Forgotten bank accounts
- Life insurance policies
- Uncashed checks
- Safe deposit box contents
- Certificates of deposit
- Old stocks

Treasury also has hundreds of priceless military decorations we're working to return. Search for military decorations here: PATreasury.gov/unclaimed-property/medals

MEMORY CARE

Café

Join us each month for coffee and conversation specifically for people with dementia and their caregivers.

What is a Memory Café?

Originally started in England, this informal setting provides the caregiver a forum for discussion, reducing the isolation often felt by people with dementia, their caregivers and families. Discussions can range from practical tips for coping with dementia, avoiding caregiver burnout or information about community resources. There is no cost or obligation, and many attendees develop friendships that result in support even outside the Memory Café setting.

All attendees will adhere to proper COVID-19 guidelines including masking, staying socially distant and hand sanitizing.

Every Tuesday of the Month

10 a.m. to 11 a.m.

Questions? 215-321-6166

Event to be held at:
Barnes and Noble
(in the Starbucks)
210 Commerce Boulevard
Fairless Hills, PA 19030

Support Group

Specially Designed for Families and Caregivers

If you are caring for someone with dementia, who is caring for you?

You are not alone. This informational, supportive group will help you to learn more about the disease as well as understand their feelings about the changes dementia has made on their daily lives. Support groups can also help you:

- Learn practical caregiving information
- Get mutual support
- Learn about your local community resources
- Find solutions to challenging behaviors
